Climate change and the new Marcos brand of diplomacy

By: Daphne Oseña-Paez

WE saw the President Ferdinand R. Marcos Jr. brand of diplomacy at the 29th APEC Summit in Bangkok, Thailand, and I like it. It is refreshing and exciting. This was his first appearance on the world stage and he did well, as former president Gloria Macapagal Arroyo said. The Asia-Pacific region covers more than half of the world's economies. The president seemed very at ease among the leaders of major economies like France, Canada, China and Saudi Arabia, like he was in the comfort of old colleagues, or friends even. There was that light moment with Canada's Prime Minister Justin Trudeau when they both compared their printed socks.

[\[Opinion\] Reflections from the hope spot: The indifference of COP27](#)

By: Jannele Michelle Jimenez and Beatriz Mikaela Ermac

A few days after Severe Tropical Cyclone Paeng all but engulfed the entirety of the Philippines, the 27th iteration of the Conference of Parties (COP) began. There was a dystopian character to the unfolding of these events. In Egypt, world leaders, mostly men, gathered for a “family picture” in what seemed to be a brief pause amidst the politicking and the fruitless negotiations, all while our country found itself reeling from the effects of another disaster.
